

Introduction

The Institutes of National Importance (INI) for medical education i.e AIIMS New Delhi along with all new AIIMS, PGIMER, JIPMER and NIMHANS conduct entrance examinations for selection of candidates for post-graduate medical courses twice a year for batches starting in January and July every year. All these institutes are tasked to develop patterns of teaching in postgraduate medical education and to demonstrate a high standard of medical education in India and to bring together in one place, educational facilities of the highest order, for the training of personnel in all important branches of health activity. Currently, these institutions conduct separate entrance exams for their courses. Considering the commonality of purpose, an initiative has been undertaken to conduct a combined INI – PG Entrance Examination for admission to PG Courses in these institutions.

It is expected that such a common exam would be convenient for the students as they would be able to apply for a large combination of seats in these institutions simultaneously at one place. It would also allow preparation of a single common merit list, offering a student the best possible choice as per his/her merit. This would prevent loss of time, effort and money in applying and joining at multiple places and also prevent wastage of seats by students moving from one institution to another.
